St Joseph's Boarding House is situated in the town of Port Lincoln at the foot of Eyre Peninsula, approx 700 km by road from Adelaide.

Established by the Sisters of St Joseph in the early 1900s, this Catholic boarding facility originally catered for girls from the Eyre Peninsula, but became co-educational in 1992.

Accommodation is in individual settings within shared rooms. The house structure enables the provision of common dining and recreational facilities whilst also providing the privacy for both male and female recreation rooms.

Supervision is facilitated by a couple living in an adjoining flat. However, as the students are in residence for 7-days, relief staff is available on weekends.

As the boarding house is situated within the school grounds, the boarders have access to school facilities for recreation and study purposes.
